MRS. ROLLINS' DEATH.

Evidence Brought Out Before the Coroner's Jury.

Statements of Excursionists and the Officers and Employes of the Boat-Was It a Moonlight Night?-Some Conflicting Testimony - A Verdict Consuring the Wharf-

Owners and Captain.

The Seventh-Street Wharf Tragedy. Coroner Patterson yesterday morning held an inquest over the body of Mrs. Sarah E. Rollins, who was drowned at the Seventh-street wharf last Monday night, as she was returning from an exeuration given by the Wes-ley chanel congregation on the W. W. Cor-coran. The jury having been swern in the presence of the body, at Mrs. Rollins' resi-dence, No. 160 F street northeast, was con-vened at the first product police station, and proceeded to take testimony.

vened at the first precipet police station, and proceeded to take testimony.

William F. Raudolph, who was a member of the exentrsion party, was the first witness examined, and testified that the excursion was landed about 9:30 p.m., and just before landing some one turned down a light in the stern of the bont, occasioning some remark and causing the passengers to harry down; at the gaug-plank the witness saw Captain Blake, but he then had no light in his hand; there was a red light on a past just above where the captain was standing there was another light in front of the cabin; the end of the gaug-plank was about a foot the end of the gang-jdairk was about a foot above the deck; witness noticed when on the gang-plank that it was extremely dark and no other lights could be seen except the street-car lights, on the street; he cautioued his people to be careful and to turn to the left, witness heard some one say "There's some one overboard!" and running to the edge of the wharf saw a gestleman named Platt bringing up a man from the water; the man asked about his bashet; witness asked him if there was any one with him, and when the man (Hoeffinger) replied "Mrs. Sarah Rollins," he shouled for her, but received no answer; a hat was then picked up on the water and recognized as Mrs. Rollins' hat; witness reported to Captain Blake that there was a woman drowning under his eyes and e end of the gang-plank was about a foot ove the deck; witness noticed when witness reported to Captain Blake that there was a woman drowning under his eyes and they wanted a light; Captain Blake sang out, "Clear the wharf, you are the craziest people I have ever seen," and give orders for his boat to leave; the boat moved away, leaving the passengers without a light; witness afterward procured a light and Mrs. Rollins' body was recovered after being in the water about thirty-five minutes, some of the officers and men from the starmer Marx Washington assisting in the teamer Mary Washington assisting in the search; the winess was quite certain that the ragedy would not have occurred if there had seen a man at the plank with a light; there were about 300 people on the wharf at the time; here were no ropes there to throw to a drown D. M. Davis, another member of the excur D. M. Davis, another member of the excur-sion party, testified that there was light over the gang-plank sufficient to get off by, and persons on either side of the plank, making the passage to the wharf safe, but heyond that there were no preciations; as the boat on the opposite side of the wharf obscured the moon, the water looked to some like a roadway; the witness was certain that there was no light on the wharf i did not see the offi-cers of the boat directing any efforts: thought was no light on the wharf; did not see the offi-cers of the boat directing any efforts; thought that if a boat had been lowered both would have been saved; did not hear any caution given, such as "Keep to the left," and was certain that if those parties had not gone over others would have gone; the boat left the wharf before the body was recovered; the ex-cursionists were landed at the narrow part of the wharf.

Mrs. Elizaboth McGuire testified that the note bett she saw was the one in the hands only light she saw was the one in the hands of the man at the head of the gang-plank. of the man at the head of the gang-plank.

Mr. W. W. Eichelberger gave testimeny similar to that of Mr. Bandolph. There was a light thrown upon the gang-plank. The boat landed on the side opposite where she left in the morning. The street-car lights being seen in the distunce, people going toward them would naturally walk off the wharf.

John Carmody, a deck-hand on the Corcount, testified that Captain Blake was standing on the gang plank with a light, and Mr. ng on the gang plank with a light, and Mr. Fowler, the mail agent, also, as the crowd was coming off; the men were on the edge of the best and witness was at the foot of the gang-plank, on the wharf, heard the cry, "Man over-board," and went overboard after him and caught hold of him, and Mr. Ellis (wheelsman n the Corcoran) came over after him with a eaving line; Mr. Betts, the watchman, helped

Mr. Carmody upon being recalled denied the part of Mr. Sullivan's testimony referring to him, and suggested that Ellis might have been the one who, asked for the light. Mr. Sullivan, however, reiterated that Carmody was the man.

Henry Ellis, wheelsman of the Corcoran, testified to being at the gang-plank when the possengers were getting off, and that he assisted in getting the man out of the water; did not suppose there was any one else everboard; heard it said that there was a lady overboard, but this was denied by many, who said she had gone up to the carr witness did not ask the captain for a light; there were three lights about the fangway; the custom was to have lights on the gangway; the custom was to have lights on tha dock when the thoon was to have lights on the dock when the thoon was not up; the moon was about an hour high at that time; witness was quite certain that Carmody did not ask the cautain for a light; had be thought there was a woman in the water witness would not have come out until be had found her.

woman was, and Carmody replied that there was no woman in the water.

Captain L. L. Blake, commander of the Corcoran, was arxt cramined. He stated that when the steamer arrived at the wharf he rounded to, as it was not convenient to go into the slip, which was crowded with avail boots so they landed outside. venient to go into the slip, which was crowded with small beats, so they landed outside; the moon was shining brightly, and he saw no necessity for lighting the large lamp; there was a lantern on either side of the pang-way and another one forward; the lanterns which were on the beat were held so as to light the way off; when be heard the cry design sweet, quieting the nerves and propagation, and the way off; when be heard the cry during sleep with all the refreshment that it below.

The jury further find that the accident was the result of criminal negligence on the part of the owners of the wharf in not having proper safeguards at the wharf, and that the captain of the best aforesaid, L. L. Blake, was negligent in not having proper lights on the wharf at the time of the landing. The jury is further of the opinios that said wharf is not properly gnarded against future like accidents, and recommend to the proper authorities to enforce a strict surveillance over

The Seventh-Street Calamity. To the Editor of The National Republican:

SIR: The lamentable accident which occurred at the Seventh-street what on Monday night might and could have been prevented—but how? To have a wharf properly vented—but how? To have a wharf properly lighted where any passengers are to arrive and depart from is very well, and the owners should be compelled to attend to this all-important matter. But how we are going to make people have common sense who have not got any is something else. The steamer Coreoran on the night of the accident did not run into her slip, in consequence of their making some repairs, but hauled alongside of the outer end of the same wharf. The steamboat men got out three hand lights, two of which were held on board the boat at the gangway and the other upon the wharf. This man Hoeffugor, having Mrs. Rollins in charge, passed off with the crowd, and when having passed off with the crowd, and when having passed the man with the light on the dock, left the crowd, which was pursuing the safe read. and turning short to the right de-liberately walked off the dock. It ap-pears they were not missed, and this perhaps is not so strange, but that there was no alarm given by the unfortunates in the water is strange, and stranger still that the man when rescued said nothing about his companion, whom it should have been his first duty to protect. If Mr. Hoeflinger had shown the least prudence the accident would not have occurred, or, if occurring, it would have required but little segucity and plack to have had both himself and Mrs. Rollins
